Episode Quotes:

“A lot of times at the center, part of outreach is we have folks traveling to farm shows, working in the communities, and talking with people” Crawford said. “When all that travel was shut down, we had to think about ‘How else do we keep these conversations going?’”

– Kate Crawford, PhD, FarmSafe Host, for Daily Iowan Newspaper

“One thing about injury prevention is that you never know if you saved a life,” Jennissen said. “But it’s well worth everyone’s time to be involved in trying to prevent these injuries from happening.”

– Dr. Charles Jennissen, Pediatrician and Emergency Medicine Physician at the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics, Daily Iowan

Now all of a sudden, she noticed him missing—and gut instinct—she ran up to check it out and he was in there about waist deep in the grain already. She knew exactly how dangerous it was.

Speaker 4

We get into the manure pits and it’s usually a multi-fatality incident, where one of them went in and the other went to get them and they both collapsed- just because you think you can hold your breath, you think you can get there.

Our vision is to have safe and healthy agricultural communities. This FarmSafe podcast series is one of many ways we hope to reach farmers and their advocates throughout our region to shine a light on both on the dangers of farming and on practices that have been adopted by farming operations that have helped protect an essential workforce— our farmers.
